Practice Text 1 — Remote Work

The number of people working from home has increased dramatically since 2020. Many employees enjoy flexible hours and no daily commute. However, managers report that teamwork can suffer when colleagues rarely meet face to face. Some companies now require staff to come to the office two or three days per week—a model called «hybrid work».

Experts suggest that hybrid arrangements may become standard in many industries. Workers save time and money, while employers can reduce office costs. Still, not every job suits remote work; nurses, factory workers, and shop assistants must usually be present on site.

Practice Text 2 — Learning Languages

Adults often believe they are too old to learn a foreign language, but research shows that motivation matters more than age. Regular practice—even fifteen minutes a day—can lead to noticeable progress. Watching films with subtitles, reading simplified news, and speaking with friends are all useful strategies.

Language exams, such as those required for university admission, test reading and grammar in context rather than oral skills. Candidates who understand the exam format and practise timed tasks tend to perform better than those who only memorise word lists.
