Task 2 — Multiple Choice (7-11)

Parks and green roofs improve life in crowded cities. Trees reduce air pollution and lower temperatures in summer. Residents who live near parks often exercise more and report lower stress. However, maintaining green spaces costs money, and some argue that land should be used for housing instead.

City planners try to balance these needs. Community gardens allow neighbours to grow vegetables together, which builds social ties. Studies in several European capitals show that property values near well-maintained parks tend to rise over time, which can benefit local budgets through taxes.

Task 3 — Gapped Text (12-30)

Online learning has become a normal part of higher education. Many master's courses combine live seminars with recorded lectures that students (12)_____ watch when convenient. This flexibility helps learners who work part-time or live far from campus.

However, self-discipline is essential. Without a fixed schedule, some students procrastinate and fall behind. Teachers recommend setting weekly goals and using calendars to track deadlines. Peer accountability groups can also help members stay (13)_____ track.

Digital platforms provide forums where students discuss readings and ask questions. Participation often counts toward final grades, so lurkers may lose easy points. Writing thoughtful posts also develops communication skills that employers (14)_____.

Technical problems occasionally disrupt online sessions. A stable internet connection and a quiet workspace reduce frustration. If connectivity fails, most universities offer recordings or alternative assignments. Students should read policies (15)_____ advance so they know what to do.

Assessment methods vary. Some modules rely on essays and projects; others include timed online tests similar (16)_____ the CBI format. Practising multiple-choice and gap-fill tasks therefore benefits postgraduate applicants as well as bachelor's graduates.

Academic integrity rules apply online. Submitting work generated entirely by AI without permission may lead (17)_____ serious penalties. Universities publish clear guidelines, and students must confirm they understand them before enrolling.

Language support services remain available remotely. Writing tutors and conversation partners meet via video call. Non-native speakers of English should take advantage of these resources, especially if they plan (18)_____ study in an English-medium programme.

If applicants prepare systematically for language exams, they typically feel less anxious on test day. Mock exams reveal whether time management needs improvement. Candidates who rush through matching tasks often miss easy points (19)_____ they read too quickly.

Conversely, spending too long on one difficult gap can harm overall scores. Skipping and returning later is a sensible strategy. There is no penalty for incorrect answers, so guessing after elimination remains worthwhile.

The T3HK section tests broader academic skills. Verbal and analytical questions require calm, logical thinking. Candidates should not neglect this block, (20)_____ passing requires minimum scores in both parts.

Ultimately, persistence matters more than perfection on any single practice test. Gradual improvement in mock scores indicates readiness. Students starting at A2 should celebrate progress from 10 to 15 raw points, (21)_____ that jump may represent dozens of rating points.

They should also rest before the exam. Sleep improves concentration and memory. Cramming all night rarely helps. A balanced routine during the final week—light review, familiar tasks, confidence-building reminders—supports better performance (22)_____ stress.

On exam day, arrive early with required identification. Read instructions carefully before starting each block. Trust preparation, respect the timer, and remember that every answered question is a chance to gain points toward the master's place they (23)_____.

Future careers increasingly require English for reading research, attending conferences, and collaborating internationally. Even if the score is lower than hoped, the skills gained during preparation remain valuable. Retaking the exam next year is always an option (24)_____ candidates learn from their error logs.

Teachers play a crucial role by focusing on format, prioritising high-frequency grammar, and building vocabulary in context. Thirty-five days of structured work cannot replace years of study, (25)_____ it can make the difference between passing and failing for motivated learners.

Success stories often involve students who once doubted their abilities but improved through consistent practice. Their message is simple: start early, analyse mistakes, simulate exam conditions, and believe that progress is possible. The EBI is challenging, (26)_____ it is not impossible for A2 learners who follow a clear plan.

Reading widely—news, blogs, simplified academic articles—strengthens comprehension speed. Listening practice, though not tested on the EBI, still supports vocabulary growth. Every exposure to English contributes (27)_____ long-term fluency.

Finally, candidates should support one another. Study groups, shared resources, and encouragement reduce isolation. Preparing for a high-stakes exam is demanding, but community and structure make the journey manageable. Good luck to everyone sitting the test this season—you have prepared, and that (28)_____.
