Task 2 — Multiple Choice (7-11)

Text: International Students

Studying in a foreign country can be exciting and stressful at the same time. International students must adapt to new academic expectations and often write longer essays than they wrote at home. Many universities offer writing centres where tutors help students structure arguments and cite sources correctly.

Culture shock is common during the first semester. Students may miss familiar food, language, and social routines. Joining clubs and attending language exchange events can ease loneliness. Research shows that students who build local friendships report higher satisfaction and better grades.

Financial planning is also important. Tuition, rent, and transport vary widely between cities. Some students take part-time jobs, although visa rules may limit working hours. Scholarships and assistantships can reduce costs for master's candidates.

7. The text mainly discusses ____.

• A) why

8. Writing centres help students with _____.

10. According to research, local friendships are linked to _____.

Task 3 — Gapped Text (12-30)

Graduate programmes in Europe attract applicants from many countries. To succeed, candidates need more than good grades; they must also prove language proficiency. The EBI (12)_____ designed to measure reading and language use at the B1-B2 level.

Preparation should begin early. Students who wait until the last week often feel anxious and (13)_____ common mistakes in timed tasks. Teachers recommend practising with official demo tests and keeping an error log (14)_____ mistakes are not repeated.

Reading strategies matter. In matching tasks, focus on the main idea rather (15)_____ minor details. In multiple-choice questions, beware of answers that repeat words from the text without matching the meaning. Synonyms and paraphrases are (16)_____ usual key to the correct option.

Grammar and vocabulary are tested in context. Gap-fill tasks may require correct verb forms, articles, prepositions, or word formation. Phrasal verbs and collocations appear frequently, (17)_____ memorising isolated word lists is not enough.

If candidates (18)_____ regularly for six weeks, their scores usually improve. Mock exams help them manage time: about ten minutes for matching, twelve for multiple choice, and twenty-three for gap-fill. They should not spend more than ninety seconds (19)_____ any single question.

Physical and mental health also affect performance. Sleep, nutrition, and short breaks during study sessions support concentration. On exam day, arriving early reduces stress. Candidates must bring identification and follow the instructions (20)_____ staff provide.

The T3HK block tests general academic competence separately. It includes verbal and analytical components. Minimum scores are required in both blocks, (21)_____ candidates cannot pass on English alone.

Universities set different competitive scores. Some faculties accept applicants with rating points around 130, (22)_____ others require 160 or higher. Checking requirements early helps candidates set realistic targets.

Motivation remains essential. Adult learners who study consistently often progress faster (23)_____ they expect. Technology offers useful tools—apps, podcasts, graded readers—but cannot replace active practice with exam-style tasks.

Peer study groups can be helpful if members stay focused. Sharing strategies for difficult question types is valuable. However, copying answers without understanding does little good. True improvement comes from analysing (24)_____ went wrong and why.

In summary, success on the EBI is achievable for A2 learners who follow a structured plan. Focus on format, prioritise high-frequency grammar, build topic vocabulary, and simulate exam conditions. With disciplined work over thirty-five days, many students reach scores sufficient (25)_____ admission to their chosen master's programme.

The exam rewards careful reading and calm decision-making. Even when unsure, selecting the best available option is better (26)_____ leaving a blank. There is no penalty for wrong answers, so educated guessing has no downside.

After the exam, results appear in the applicant's online account. Whatever the outcome, the preparation process strengthens English skills useful (27)_____ academic life. Reading academic articles becomes easier; writing emails to professors feels less intimidating.

Some candidates retake the test if their score is below expectations. They apply lessons from their error logs and try again the following year. Persistence, (28)_____ talent alone, often determines long-term language growth.

Finally, remember that language learning is incremental. Celebrate small victories—a better mock score, a faster reading time, a phrasal verb used correctly. These signs indicate progress (29)_____ may not always be visible day to day.

Good luck to every candidate preparing this season. Trust your plan, respect the timer, and believe that consistent effort (30)_____ results over time.
