Task 2 — Multiple Choice (Questions 7-11)

Text: Learning a New Language as an Adult

Many adults decide to learn a new language after the age of twenty-five. Some do it for career reasons, others for travel or personal interest. Research shows that adult learners can progress very quickly when they use the right methods and stay consistent.

One of the most effective approaches is called "comprehensible input." This means listening to or reading material that is slightly above your current level — not too difficult to understand, but challenging enough to teach new vocabulary. Podcasts, graded readers, and films with subtitles are popular tools for this.

Another key factor is daily practice. Even fifteen minutes a day produces better results than a three-hour session once a week. Forming a habit of listening, speaking, or writing a little every day trains the brain to process the language automatically.

Adult learners sometimes worry that they will never sound like native speakers. However, having a strong accent does not stop communication. Clarity and confidence matter more than a perfect accent.
